Harvard Communities Honored With Two Bar Award Wins For Homebuilding Excellence

Denver, CO. – (February 2, 2009) – Harvard Communities has been recognized by the Homebuilders Association of Metro Denver at the annual Bar Awards presented for distinction in homebuilding. Harvard was awarded Best Interior Design For a Detached Home Over $600,000 and Built Green Home Of The Year for The Skyview model at The Architect Collection located in Stapleton.

The Bar Awards are earned by those who “Raise the Bar” and set a new standard of excellence in the Denver home building industry. The Bar Awards attracts numerous entries from eight Denver Metro counties.

“This has been a great year of recognition for things we do at Harvard Communities,” remarks John Keith, President. Harvard is known for building innovative homes that connect superior, thoughtful design to leading green energy technologies and renewable energy components. Harvard has garnered national recognition as one of the country’s leaders in energy efficient home building.

About Harvard Communities:

Harvard’s mission is to create a higher standard of home building. Harvard meets the needs and challenges of our times, with ultra energy efficient homes that cost less to live in and preserve our environment. Harvard believes in innovative green building practices, true craftsmanship and inspired architecture and design. Since 1992 Harvard has been building award-winning homes and neighborhoods in some of the most desirable locations in Denver including Lowry, Stapleton, Belmar, Castle Pines Village and Cherry Hills Village.
